History and Translation: Multidisciplinary Perspectives

Inaugural conference of the History and Translation Network

25-28 May 2022, Tallinn

In the last decade there has been a marked growth in interest in historical research on translation and interpreting and the theoretical and methodological issues it raises. This is evident not only in the work of translation and interpreting scholars, but also in the increasing attention paid by historical disciplines such as cultural and global history to translation phenomena, and in the widespread use of translation as a metaphor or paradigm in research areas such as comparative literature, semiotics, anthropology and, more recently, memory studies – just to mention a few.

What these approaches share is the idea that acts of translation and interpretation play a crucial role in the making of history, and the historical context is essential to our understanding of these acts. Translation history thus becomes the history of the role of pivotal individuals, and of practices of intercultural mediation. It does not limit itself to comparative stylistics or the ways in which texts are transposed from foreign languages, but studies the broader cultural transfer brought about in and by translation, paying particular attention to the ways in which language itself is inscribed in history, and engages with subjects of discourse, power, and asymmetrical relations. Translation history is in this respect an essential part of (intercultural) history.

The inaugural conference of the recently founded History and Translation Network (historyandtranslation.net) invites contributions in which translation is both a constitutive category of historical analysis and a historically specific practice. We wish to address history from a transnational and comparative perspective through the lens of translation, bringing together scholars from a wide range of disciplinary and institutional backgrounds, such as: translation and interpreting studies, history, literary studies, cultural studies, sociology, comparative studies, philology and languages, anthropology, religion, international relations, philosophy, archive studies, museum studies, etc.

Subjects for papers may include but are not limited to:

- Theoretical and methodological issues in translation and interpreting history
- The role of translators/interpreters in (cultural) history
- Criteria of historical periodization: what has translation history to tell us about this?
- Translation/interpreting, power relations, censorship

History and Translation Network

- Global history and translation/interpreting
- Translation/interpreting in colonial and postcolonial settings
- Translation/interpreting in the history of religions
- Translation/interpreting in the history of knowledge
- Translation histories and literary histories: overlappings and divergencies
- Translation/interpreting in war and peace (diplomacy) history
- Translation/interpreting in the history of communication (technologies)
- What are the data for translation/interpreting histories?

The conference will take place on the 25-28 May 2022 at Tallinn University.
